COVID-19 (Antigen)

NEGATIVE

The Rhode Island Department of Health (RIDOH) recommends getting a follow-up PCR test if:

You have symptoms (<https://covid.ri.gov/covid-19-prevention/about-covid-19-disease>), and get a negative result on your rapid antigen test.

You do not have symptoms (<https://covid.ri.gov/covid-19-prevention/about-covid-19-disease>), and get a positive result on your rapid antigen test.

It is highly recommended that you get your follow-up PCR test on the same day you had your rapid antigen test. If you do not get your recommended PCR test within 48 hours after your rapid test, RIDOH will consider your positive rapid antigen result final and start contact tracing.

If your follow-up PCR test result is negative, you can end isolation and return to school or work.

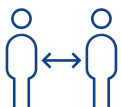

If your follow-up PCR test result is positive, you need to continue isolating for 10 days from the date of your first test.

Protect your household:

Wear a mask and social distance around anyone not in your household.

Limit interactions with anyone not in your household.

Get tested 5 days after there's any chance you might have been exposed.
